HILL UNDER FIRE

SENATE GATLING GUNS TURNED ON NEW YORK'S MEMBER.

He Endorses President Cleveland in Emphatic Terms and Scores the Senate.

Mr. Gray Odds Him Down and a Brick Interchange of Criminations Quarrels Follows.

Day of Dramatic Interest in Senate Over Tariff Bill—Democrats Assail Democrats While the Opposition Sits by and Enjoys the Situation—Cleveland's Interference Caustically Criticized.

Tariff's Fate is Undecided.

WASHINGTON, July 20.—Today was one of dramatic interest in the senate, for the fate of the tariff bill of 1894 depended upon the course pursued in the upper branch of congress. The friends of the tariff bill were anxious faces and more than once during the day felt that the very danger point had been reached. The enemies of the bill at times believed they would be able to defeat it. When adjournment came the situation was still perplexing. The senate proceedings proper were of a peculiar nature, in that the debate was carried on entirely by the Democrats save by a brief speech by Senator Sherman and a question by Senator Aldrich. The principal speeches of the day were those of Senator Hill and Senator Smith, both of whom were in the minority. Senator Hill's position, in the opinion of the most conspicuous incidents of the day. Senator Vest took occasion to talk in plain terms in defense of the right of the majority to manage its own business without executive interference. His criticism of the president's course and the action of Mr. Wilson was more severe than that of any other senator. The tariff committee and the position of the senate conference.

The action of Senator Vilas in preceding his speech with a motion to strike out the eighth tariff schedule was an additional sensation of a sensational day, from the fact that it was probable the motion would be carried. The tariff bill, as it was found, the motion may be declared out of order.

The statements of Senator Smith and Senator Vilas, with their respective motions, might mean the loss of the tariff, while Senator Blanchard stated decidedly that he would not vote for the bill if it came to a vote. Senator Gray's vigorous speech was followed by a brickbat volley with Senator Hill. The exciting day's proceedings closed with an official motion to adjourn over until Monday.

Senator Voorhees, chairman of the finance committee, arose and called up the conference report on the tariff bill and the floor to Senator Smith of New Jersey, who read a carefully prepared speech.

SENATOR SMITH'S SPEECH.

"I had hoped, he said, when the bill passed the senate two weeks ago that it would be a landmark in the history of the last twenty-four hours had confronted the democratic party with the possibility of a failure of all tariff legislation at this session. If so the responsibility would be placed where it belonged. He criticized the president for violating the principles of his party in attempting to interfere with the tariff schedule of the legislative branch of the government, but declared that he should never be intimidated by the threats from the president, nor by the promises of the democrats at the other end of the capital who had been so unapologetically applauded. In the senate every democratic vote was needed to pass the tariff bill, and the democratic party were not tariff reformers; they were free traders.

The president, in his letter accepting the nomination, had made no mention of the tariff. He proceeded to point out the reductions that the senate bill made on coal, iron and lead ore and on sugar, and he declared that the tariff was a measure to protect the industries of the country and had not been framed by need for money. He said that he knew nothing of the great commercial interests of the United States.

He asserted that the framers of the constitution had intended that the tariff should be made by the senate and not by the president. He declared that the tariff was a measure to protect the industries of the country and had not been framed by need for money. He said that he knew nothing of the great commercial interests of the United States.

the conference. Mr. Hill's motion, however, will under the rules, take precedence. There was nothing, said Mr. Gray, in speaking of his motion, that had occurred to make unusual action on the part of the senate necessary. He did not think it was necessary to retreat on account of the determined attitude of the house or threats from any quarter. He commended the wisdom which overcame the difficulties which stood in the way of passing the bill.

At this point a very hot personal controversy developed between Senators Gray and Hill. Mr. Gray said that during the time the democratic senators were endeavoring to agree upon a tariff bill, the republican senators were endeavoring to raise the voice in favor of the doctrine of free raw materials, which he now advocated.

Mr. Hill—On every occasion when the subject of free coal and iron ore was up I have advocated that there be no duty levied upon them.

Mr. Gray—There are thirty senators within the sound of my voice that know what I say is absolutely correct. Mr. Hill—Will the senator from Delaware name a time when I failed to go on record for the position I now occupy?

Mr. Gray—Does not the senator from New York know that I have been on record on this subject for many years? Mr. Hill—I know of no such occasion.
